Psychiatrist, author and former member of parliament and minister Claes Andersson says he stands by his statement in the Elders' Council on Yle Vega on Monday. Donald Trump suffers from a personality disorder, he says. The fact that Claes Andersson is now expressing his opinion is because he is a specialist in psychiatry by training. He has worked in psychiatry for over 30 years, including as a chief physician in Ekenäs, at Hesperia Hospital in Helsinki and at Veikkola Sanatorium. He has treated many narcissists and psychopaths during his active career as a doctor, and has his experience to rely on.

- Narcissistic psychopaths are by no means uncommon, he says. What is a narcissist then? A narcissist is self-absorbed, and lacks the ability to empathize with others. He lacks the ability to empathize. Therefore, he does not take responsibility or feel guilty for anything, Andersson explains, adding that despite this, the narcissist is often both charismatic and seductive.

And he maintains that when it comes to Trump, the case is rarely clear. He says he can make this diagnosis remotely, because the symptoms are so clear. And Trump has offered them himself - in everything he has said to cheering crowds and in TV speeches.
And on Twitter.

Lee, a forensic psychiatrist, containing essays from 27 psychiatrists, psychologists, and other mental health professionals describing the "clear and present danger" that US President Donald Trump's mental health poses to the "nation and individual well being".

Narcissus painting by Caravaggio, depicting Narcissus gazing upon the water after falling in love with his own reflection.

Narcissistic personality disorder (NPD) is a personality disorder characterized by a life-long pattern of exaggerated feelings of self-importance, an excessive need for admiration, and a diminished ability to empathize with other people's feelings. Narcissistic personality disorder is one of the sub-types of the broader category known as personality disorders.

GOAL FOR Musk

Elon Musk's plan is actually from a book from 1855. Technocrats take over the world and dismantle important social functions and they appoint a council from among their extremely rich friends to make the decisions. Ordinary people are far too stupid. See for yourself they were completely fooled by voting for and believing all the lies that Donald Trump spun out of himself at his ridiculous rallies

As the Great Depression deepened in the early 1930s, Americans looked in desperation to a variety of radical social and political solutions. One of the most popular was "Technocracy," which "offered a seemingly scientific explanation of America's ills," namely, the "disastrous inefficiency" of "the wage-price system, the very heart of capitalism." The technocrats proposed abandoning business and representative government as the driving forces of our economy, and replacing them with massive social engineering centered on "technicians - especially engineers . . . as the efficient, scientific, anticapitalistic, elite capable of reorienting the economic order around rational production and distribution. Theirs was a clarion call for technicians to plan and engineer the new order." Akin 1977. "Politically unbiased experts in red-and-gray Technocracy uniforms would assay each nation's yearly energy output, then divide it fairly among the citizenry." Goods and services could be purchased at prices set out "on a table of energy equivalents calculated by objective Technocratic savants," all led by the "Great Engineer." Mann 2018, 273. While originally based on energy calculations by scientists at Columbia University, the Technocracy dogma was written by "a charismatic Greenwich Village layabout named Howard Scott." Scott, who "dismissed the world's businesspeople, social scientists, lawyers, and teachers as charlatans" was the long-time Director-in-Chief of Technocracy Incorporated. Its program was essentially a "techno-autocracy," with a self-perpetuating elite, overt hostility to "aliens and Asiatics," and a wide range of "fascist trappings."

By the outset of World War II, the popularity of the Technocracy movement had declined substantially, but it continued to be active. In July 1940 - as war raged in Europe while America had not engaged - Scott published the organization's position, "America - Now and Forever," in the Official Magazine of Technocracy Inc. Consistent with the movement's isolationist policy, it proposed a dramatic increase in the nation's continental defense. Among other things, the government was to greatly increase the size of the military; "conscript" all American means of transportation, communications systems, public utilities, manufacturing industries, mining enterprises, and patents; close all bars; "abolish" all foreign language periodicals, advertising, radio programs, and organizations; and prohibit outgoing transfers of currency

Elon Musk's plan is actually from a book from 1855. Technocrats take over the world and dismantle important social functions and they appoint a council from among their extremely rich friends to make the decisions. Ordinary people are far too stupid. See for yourself they were completely fooled by voting for and believing all the lies that Donald Trump spun out of himself at his ridiculous rallies

Along with these proposed steps, Scott wrote that the territory of the United States must be expanded in order to defend it properly. The new "Technate of America" was to include all of Canada, Greenland, Central America, the Caribbean, and parts of Columbia, Venezuela and the Guyanas. "Defense Bases" were to be established around the perimeter as far afield as Attu; Pago Pago; the Galapagos; Georgetown, Guyana; Bermuda; St. John's, Newfoundland; and Cape Farewell, Greenland. In Scott's words, "On the map accompanying this issue is delineated the geographical territory required for the adequate defense and operation of this Continental Area. . . . We should immediately acknowledge our planned intentions of consolidating these territories, not as separate political entities, but as part of the Continent of North America. . . . America must possess all North American territories on the accompanying map of the Technate, for the defense of this Continent."

How to achieve this monumental consolidation? "The government of the United States should take immediate action to acquire these territories and others, such as Greenland and the Galapagos Islands. The acquisition of these territories should be a mandatory part of the program of Continental defense for immediate achievement - either by purchase, negotiation, or the force of arms.“

The success of the New Deal had already reduced the attractiveness of Technocracy's economic and political proposals at the time this map was published, and the attack on Pearl Harbor ended support for the isolation of the United States. Technocracy Inc. nevertheless continued to evolve, and it exists to this day.

The "Technate of America" refers to the proposed North American superstate envisioned by the Technocracy movement, led by Howard Scott, especially prominent in the 1930s; it described a self-sustaining continental union (North America, Central America, Caribbean, northern South America) run by engineers and scientists (technocrats) to manage resources via an "energy theory of value" instead of money, replacing democracy with an authoritarian system, a concept detailed in rare maps from the era, notably one from 1940 that gained recent attention due to links to Elon Musk's grandfather, Joshua N. Haldeman, a member of Technocracy, Inc., reports Reddit users, Issa Rice, Wikimedia Commons, Cornell University Library Digital Collections, and Facebook posts.

Trump Dreams

Key Aspects of the Technate Concept:

Continentalism: A belief in uniting North America into one self-sufficient, resource-rich unit.

Rule by Experts: Proposed governance by scientists and engineers (technocrats) rather than politicians.

Energy Theory of Value: Replacing monetary systems with an accounting of energy inputs for goods and services.

Authoritarianism: A departure from democracy, with uniformity (gray suits, specific tie/shirt) reflecting its hierarchical nature.

Influence: Gained traction during the Great Depression but faded after WWII, though ideas resurface periodically.

Origins: Rooted in early 20th-century ideas from Frederick W. Taylor, Henry Gantt, and Thorstein Veblen.

Technocracy, Inc.: Founded by Howard Scott in 1933, popularizing the idea.

Decline: Public trust eroded due to crises like Vietnam and Watergate, and the movement's perceived authoritarianism.

Interest in the Technate concept, particularly its 1940 map, resurfaced due to its connection to Elon Musk's grandfather, Joshua N. Haldeman, a member of Technocracy, Inc., notes Reddit threads and Facebook posts.

The idea remains a historical curiosity, sometimes linked to modern discussions about centralized planning and technological governance, but is not a significant political force today.

The Movement

Howard Scott's (1890-1970) Technocracy Movement, also known as Technocracy Incorporated, sprung from the "Technical Alliance," a study group at Columbia University. This was a small group in numbers, but with members of great importance. Founded by Howard Scott in 1919 with the backing of Thorstein Veblen, the Alliance was defunct by 1921. Following that, Scott moved to found a new populist movement. The movement reached its peak in the 1930s when it had hundreds of thousands of followers in its book clubs, composed of university students, professionals, and engineers across the US, Canada, and the UK. Howard Scott was its founder, its chief ideologue, and chief spokesman. Howard Scott was the movement's "Lenin." In Technocracy Rising: The Trojan Horse of Global Transformation, we read, "It may not have been Scott's idea to position himself as a messiah, but neither did he do anything to discourage it."

Conclusion

The Technocracy Movement was founded by two men obsessed with monitoring, with recording statistics, calculation, and planning. Scott and Hubbert are utopians that wanted to make the world better. The goal was a "perfect" world, but in their "perfect" world there was no space for freedom, individuality, or the opportunity to develop a unique self. For utopia, freedom must be eliminated and all choices are made by "experts." What kind of utopia is that?
